Add a content editor role to Drupal's standard profile

View Edit View history CLONE ISSUE

What is the problem to solve?

Currently, when you install a new Drupal site with the Standard profile, you get 3 user roles by default: admin, Authenticated user (logged-in user when this issue is fixed) and Anonymous. The admin role is supposed to serve for site building and development purposes and comes with almost every existing permission by default. The Authenticated/logged-in role has the same permissions as the Anonymous user (viewing content) plus is able to post comments. Drupal is a content management system but we don't have any default user role to just manage content.

Proposed resolution

This proposal aims to create an out-of-the-box editor role to serve Drupal's main purpose: manage content.

Who is this for?

This solution will be focused mainly on content editors' needs, but it'll also be useful to guide and help site builders as part of the basic setup. So instead of the initial user story phrasing focused on the site builder/developer (for example: "A module developer can assign permissions to a content editor role"), we would say "A content editor can create content (...)" to focus on the content editor requirements. We need to define the minimum common functionalities that make sense in most of the project scales, and the initial set up should be easily extended.

Also, as @mlncn suggested, any modules that choose to use progressive enhancement if this particular role is present will be much improved.

Result: what will be the outcome?

As a result, when Drupal is installed with the standard profile, a new role will be created with a new set of permissions and options.

For content editors, the minimum industry-expected standard permissions for content editors will be set already.

For site builders, this role will be already created with basic permissions defined, which also

Issues

Use PostCSS in core, initially only for Claro

View   Edit   View history   CLONE ISSUE

Problem/Motivation

While implementing the new design system, the team raised some interest in using some of the new CSS features (mainly CSS custom properties or CSS variables). Being able to leverage these new features would lead to less overhead in the maintenance.

For example, CSS custom properties are currently supported by latest browser versions, while some older browsers are lacking support (browser support matrix). However, with the usage of CSS preprocessor, we could already reliably use CSS custom properties.

Proposed resolution

Use PostCSS to compile a version of our CSS that is supported by the browsers Drupal currently support. PostCSS is used by industry leaders including Wikipedia, Twitter, Alibaba, and JetBrains. PostCSS has over 20 000 stars in Github and is being used by almost 2 million projects according to Github.

Plugins we are currently using:

- Autoprefixer is a plugin to parse CSS and add vendor prefixes to CSS rules using values from Can I Use. It is recommended by Google and used in Twitter and Alibaba.
- PostCSS Calc reduces calc() references whenever it's possible. This can be particularly useful with the PostCSS Custom Properties plugin.
- PostCSS Custom Properties lets us use Custom Properties in CSS, following the CSS Custom Properties specification.
- PostCSS Inline plugin to transform @import rules by inlining content. This enables importing variables from a central file.

Dependency evaluation:

- Maintainership of the package: PostCSS project itself has multiple maintainers but it seems
